BANK MELODY.

DEBIL OF THE RIGHT HON. MRS. BANK.
Not a speech was heard, not a lawyer's tongue,
As we raised the shrunk corse to our shoulders;
Not a state of distress or melody sang
O'er the ditch where the old lady moulders.

We buried her privately, late at night,
In a lone bye-place; Major Downing
Vowed by jings, that he never yet saw such a sight,
And he called it a "judgment crown."

No heaped up mound, nor vault we tricked,
But splash! in the water we pitched her,
And she raised up her head, and grunted and kicked,
As if the old boy had bewitched her.

Hal Clay said a prayer; it was rather brief;
He was so overcome with sorrow,
And we all, more or less, had a touch of grief,
For we knew what would come on the morrow.

We knew—as we laid the old woman down
For the mummies and cels to feed on—
That her goods and effects were to go to the town,
As had early in life been agreed on.

We knew that we all had to settle our loans,
That the time had gone by for renewal,
That the Demos would laugh at our sighs and groans,
And the sheriff be callous and cruel.

We had just got done, and we stood in the damp,
And were talking about absconding;
When we heard the deputy tipstaff's tramp,
And the marshal's voice resounding.

Quicker than lightning we all cleared out,
And cursed every Troglodyte Tory,
Not a line did we write, not a speech did we spout,
And we left her alone with her glory.

THE CONVENT OF ST. CLARA IN SICILY.

The Judicial Court of Catania has recently been occupied with a trial arising out of an attempt to rob the celebrated Convent of St. Clara. The investigation disclosed many curious circumstances.

In the towns of Sicily, where the most daring robberies are frequently committed, the nobility, and persons possessing large sums of money, which they do not immediately want to use, are accustomed to deposit them in Monasteries. Some time ago, Count C. sent to the Convent of St. Clara, an enormous coffer filled with money and jewels. The circumstance by some means became known, and a band of robbers resolved to possess themselves of the treasure. After jangling various schemes to get access to the Convent, an opportunity at length presented itself. The fire-wood of the Convent was nearly exhausted, and it was necessary to lay in a fresh supply. The Abess applied to the Bishop, and one of the Grand Vicars of the Prelate himself purchased the wood, and sent a cart load to the Convent, under the care of a man in whom he could repose confidence. This man was directed to unload the wood, and range it in its proper place, in the presence of one of the Zitella, servants of the Convent.

The wood was to be deposited in the garden of the Convent, of which it was consequently required to open the gate. While the waggoner was discharging his load, a porter offered to assist him for the reward of a glass of wine. The Zitella imprudently acceded to the proposition, notwithstanding the strict prohibition against admitting any stranger. When the wood had been deposited, she ran to the Convent to obtain the glass of wine. On her return the porter had vanished. The waggoner knew not what had become of him, but supposed that, being tired of waiting, he had gone away. The Zitella was not without her fears, but, after looking about and seeing no trace of the man, she locked the gates and carried the keys to the Abess.

After supper, one of the nuns, on looking from her window, fancied she saw a man gliding about under the trees of the garden. She mentioned the circumstance to the Zitella; but the latter, fearing she should be punished for her negligence, assured the nun that her suspicions must be groundless; observing that, even though there were a man in the garden, the thick walls and grated windows must secure the safety of the convent. Nevertheless, the Zitella resolved to keep a strict watch, and, on retiring to her cell, she stationed herself at the open window. Some time elapsed, and as she neither saw nor heard any thing to excite apprehension, she determined to retire to rest. Nevertheless, her alarm prevented her from sleeping. Suddenly she thought she heard the sound of strange voices whispering. She ran to her window, and was greatly terrified at seeing seven or eight men in the garden, conversing together in a low tone of voice. She listened attentively, and what was her consternation on learning that the pretended porter, who had taken advantage of the interval when the nuns were at supper, to introduce himself into the Convent, was concealed beneath the Abess's bed. It had been arranged that he was to seize her by the throat and strangle her if she made the least alarm, instead of purchasing her life, by declaring in what part of the Convent Count C's coffin was deposited.

The Zitella, on hearing this, determined on ringing the great bell of the Convent, a signal of distress in religious houses which never fails of bringing prompt and effectual aid. As she was ascending to the tower, she heard the Abess ring the bell of her own apartment. Finding that she had not a moment to lose, she hurried up the dark and narrow staircase, and, in a few seconds, the great bell of the Convent sounded an alarm. At this unexpected sound, the robbers, who were in the garden, finding themselves discovered, fled and abandoned their accomplice. The latter had been unable to find the keys, and having no chance of effecting his escape, he concealed himself. The inhabitants of the town immediately thronged round the gates of the Convent, to render the requisite assistance. Having learned the cause of the alarm, they surrounded the building on all sides, until the arrival of the magistrates and the military. The gates were then opened, and after a long and difficult search, the offender was discovered and given up to justice.

They are so constructed, that you can boil in three places and bake at the same time. They have a large hearth convenient for roasting; a good oven combining all the advantages of a brick one, and also, of a common bake-kettle; consume but a small quantity of fuel, and are perfectly free from smoking. In addition to their former patterns they have a smaller size, to which in point of economy and convenience, for small families, there are none considered superior. The Commercial Gazette.—The Gazette of Tuesday contains an Editorial Article, "The Past and the Present," which is a most singular jumble of truth and falsehood. It appears to me almost impossible that the writer, whoever he was, could have honestly believed some important statements which he has there made to be facts. Although the Gazette has found it to be for its own private interest to change sides, and to go over to the enemies of the administration, yet it was to be hoped that it would preserve its regard for truth, and not quite so soon conform to the loose habits and principles of its new associates. A few of its mistakes will now be noted.

"In New England (says the Gaz.) popular prejudice was warmly enlisted against the war of 1812, and was equally hostile to the administration of Mr Madison; and hence it was, that the New Englanders refused to fit out privateers," &c. This is true, so far as it goes; but it should have been added, that the N. England Federalists had always been in favour of England, and opposed to France, with whom she was then at war.—This preference and partiality still continued, after our declaration of war; and the success of the British and our own defeat was ardently desired by the prevailing party in N. England, and especially by the rich and powerful. On this account they discouraged privateering, and refused to embark in enterprises of this kind.—"This prejudice," (continues the Gaz.) honorable in itself when morally considered," &c. Now, this prejudice,—that is, "against the war and against Mr Madison's administration,"—was not "honorable in itself when morally considered." There was not the slightest particle of honor or morality connected with it. On the contrary, it was highly dishonorable and immoral.—It was traitorous and disgraceful, and will ever remain a foul stain upon the patriotic character of N. England. If the writer had any intention of intimating, that the morality of N. England was opposed to privateering, as unjust and wicked, (which, however, is not the correct import of his language) I will only say, that such an idea is altogether chimerical. In a war, which should be popular in this part of the Union, and under circumstances which should hold out a fair prospect of gain, there is no section of the country which would engage with so much spirit and good will in privateering, as New England.

"The war of 1812 (says the Gaz.) opened a fresh field for human enterprise, [that of manufactures.]—That field promised a golden harvest; and ere the year 1814 had been closed, it was almost filled to excess by the enterprising spirits of New England." This is altogether an exaggeration. The amount, at this time, invested in manufactures, beyond what it was in 1812, was very small;—so small, that N. England, almost unanimously, was then, and for years after, opposed to any encouragement or protection of our manufactures by Congress.

"In the course of the inauspicious year of the peace, 1815, (the Gaz. continues) thousands of the wealthiest families of New England were reduced to poverty," &c. This is true in part, but not from the cause assigned by the Gazette—losses on manufactures. Hundreds of causes, more powerful, operated to produce the effects which immediately followed the peace. Out of these distresses, the Gaz. contends, grew the memorials to Congress and the tariff of 1816, which, says the Gaz., "was opposed by John Randolph." Why name John Randolph? Was it not opposed by all New England, and by every member of Congress from New England, or nearly so? Did not New England remonstrate, and memorialize, and hold meetings of citizens, and exert every nerve against the system? Instead of petitioning for protection to American manufactures, or asking relief from this source, N. England was violently opposed to such a remedy, and warmly protested against it.

But in spite of N. England, "the bill finally became a law (says the Gaz.) and, aided by its provisions, American manufactures were resuscitated, and ere the close of 1817, the manufacturers found themselves on the very top of the tide of prosperity, with a most flattering prospect before them." The consequence was, that at the commencement of 1822, the business of home manufactures was absolutely overdone. The protection of Government was "gain called for, which was followed by the tariff of 1824." This quotation is made, not for the purpose of disputing its truth, but to show that the protection of 1816 was amply sufficient to place the manufactures "on the very top of the tide of prosperity," secure from foreign competition; so that the distress of 1822 was owing, not to want of protection, but to its excess, which had induced so many to crowd into the business, that it was overdone, and the production exceeded the consumption. It is plain, therefore, that the increase of the tariff in 1824 was not required for protection, but for the purpose of assessing a tax upon the people at large, the proceeds of which should be paid to the manufacturers, in order to remunerate them for the losses they had sustained, by entering too deeply, and to an unjustifiable extent, in their manufacturing speculations.

It must not be forgotten, that New England, thus far, had uniformly opposed the protective system. She most violently resisted the tariff of 1824. If there be any merit in the system, she has no claim to any portion of it. Her leading men then, and her leading men now, her Websters and others, fought against it, and retreated only inch by inch as it gained ground.

After the passage of the tariff of 1824, the capitalists of New England began to look about them. Foreign trade was then unproductive. They concluded that domestic manufactures, with these unreasonable protective bounties, afforded the best prospect for gain, then existing. They thought that money might be made by engaging in them. With this discovery, all their former ideas and arguments about public good vanished instantaneously. What was, before, to effect the ruin of the country, was now to be its only source of prosperity! What was before unreasonable, excessive, ruinous, and unjust, as a protection to the manufacturers, was now altogether insufficient and niggardly!—"Too much," like "conscience," was, at last once, an unparliamentary term. The interest in view had now become personal, not that of the country. The powerful, leading men and members of Congress, in New England, had embarked their individual property in manufacturing speculations. What an astonishing change in opinions, and in views concerning public good, such investments of private property make, with all our great men, our great Congressional orators, those high in office, and those who lead in public affairs!—New England having joined the protection party, it became so strong, that it was in its power to procure the passage of any laws which it desired. The tariff of 1828 was accordingly passed, a mere personification of the avarice, the injustice, and the overgrasping disposition of the Northern manufacturers. This has been justly called, even by those who voted for it, "the bill of abominations." In the support of such a bill as this, New England, of course, which had opposed all its more moderate predecessors, came forward in united phalanx, with Mr Webster in the van. Excessive avarice is always shortsighted. Like vaulting ambition, it o'er-leaps itself.—This outrageous act strengthened, invigorated, or almost generated, the Free-trade party and the Nullifiers of the South.

I have been led, in these latter remarks, somewhat out of my intended course; especially, as they do not disagree very materially from the opinions expressed by the Gazette. We come now to the "Compromise Bill" of 1833, which grew, of necessity, out of the ill-judged tariff of 1828, and of the appalling opposition of the Nullifiers and the free-trade party generally. This bill, says the Gazette, "was sanctioned by H. Clay, J. C. Calhoun, D. Webster, and by all who best understood the legitimate economy of the Republic, and the legitimate ends of common justice."

Here, let me ask, whether the Gazette, in asserting that the Compromise Bill of 1833, was sanctioned by Daniel Webster, makes that assertion from sheer ignorance, or from the deliberate intention of uttering a falsehood, and of deceiving, if possible, the people of Massachusetts, in order to strengthen, by any feasible means, the party to which it has recently gone over? Is it possible, that any person, possessing the least knowledge of politics, is ignorant that Mr Webster opposed that Compromise Bill with all his power, declared in his place in the Senate, that he disclaimed being a party to it, and finally recorded his vote against it, as did also all, or nearly all, the National Republican members of Congress from New England? Does any one doubt, that if the Northern Whigs, as they choose to call themselves, can obtain the sway in Congress, that this compromise law will be immediately repealed, and the tariff of 1828, or a worse one, be again brought into permanent operation? We pity the man who can cherish a doubt upon these questions.

This compromise bill, according to the Gazette, is a settled measure with all parties, never to be disturbed, "has been found almost faultless," and has united the tariff and free trade parties in indissoluble union. "It is not probable the tariff question will be seriously agitated again for twenty years. It is settled to the satisfaction of all parties. Let it rest." So says the Gazette! To which we reply—Fudge!

Now what is the object and design of all this rignarole about the eternal union of all parties, the Tariff, the Free-trade, the Antismasonic, the State-rights, the Nullifying, the Union parties, &c. &c., this impracticable jumbling of all interests, this impossible mixture of oil and water? It is simply this: Mr Abbot Lawrence, the Whig candidate for Congress, belongs to this "high-minded party," or combination of parties—is "attached to it by birth, by education, and by principle," and is to fight impartially both for the Tariff party and the Free-trade party. He has no private interest to serve, not in the least—therefore, "whatever he shall attempt to do, will be conducted with a single eye to the happiness and glory of his country." Ergo, every body, of all parties, not excepting the Jackson Republicans, must vote for him; and after his election is irrevocably secured, then we shall see—what we shall see.

We have nothing to say against Mr Abbot Lawrence personally. We believe him to be a very worthy man, and a good citizen. As a man of business, he is said to be capable and estimable. As a legislator, especially as a member of Congress, we should think it would be admitted, that he lacks age and experience, and an education suitable to that station. But our strongest objections arise from other sources. The Lawrence family, and especially the head of the house to which Mr Abbot Lawrence belongs, has been the well known leader of the Ultra Tariff party here, has had almost unlimited influence in it, and the most ultra and obnoxious measures, pursued by the New England delegation in Congress connected with the tariff, are known or admitted to have proceeded from that source, or to have received its sanction. That house has been, from the first, the principal agent for the manufacturing establishments of the Interior, in the sale of their fabrics, and in making large advances of money, from the immense amount and profits of which it has already realized fortunes. It is still engaged in the same lucrative business, intimately connected, in its vital interests, with the manufacturing and the high tariff system. That house and family, in all its branches, has uniformly acted with the ultra friends of that system, and there is not the least reason to doubt that it will continue to pursue the same course. We therefore ask, whether Mr Abbot Lawrence, a most ultra tariff man, from "birth, education, and principle," with all his business, his prejudices, and his pecuniary interests, inseparably connected with the high tariff policy, is the proper person, at this time, to represent this district in Congress, to obtain influence there, to soothe party feelings, to unite conflicting interests, to inspire full confidence among the Southern members, and, in fine, to take that commanding station, which the member from this district should be able to acquire? Is he the man to unite the late contending interests—to repress the violent fires, which are only smothered, not extinguished—which, with the slightest breeze, will again burst into a flame? The present calm is merely portentous of a coming storm. In this storm, the Whig party may be wrecked and shaken into fragments. Is Abbot Lawrence the skillful and tried seaman, to be entrusted with so much, in such a crisis?—Is he the experienced pilot, the skillful mariner, the hardy son of Neptune, in which the passengers, the freighters, the owners, are willing to confide, at such a time? Let them ascertain this before the day of election arrives.

The Reverend James Whitfield, Archbishop of Baltimore, died in that city on the 19th inst.

Ohio Election.—The following, from the Globe, is the latest news from Ohio. There seems to be no doubt of Lucas' election, the bragging of the Bank editors to the contrary, notwithstanding.

GOVERNOR.
	Lucas.	Anti-Jackson.
COUNTIES.
Miami, Shelby, Champaign, Harrison, Carroll, Warren, Clinton, Clark, Columbiana, Portage, Stark, Jefferson, Franklin, 18 towns,	300 1508 593 1182 823 426 999 maj. 2068 184 384 1099	166 maj. 499 476 1684 934 1118 2405 932

We have no doubt of Lucas' election.

CONGRESS.
We have heard of the election of the following members:
Jackson: Kennon, Colerick, Webster, Thompson, Kilgore, Chaney.
Anti-Jackson: Corwin, Bond, Howell, Storer.

So far, we have lost three members, namely, Lytle, Mitchell and Allen, who have been beaten by Storer, Howell and Bond; and have gained two—Kennon and Colerick—who have defeated Bell and Spangler.

Hamilton county, in which Cincinnati is situated, has gone against the administration by 150 majority.—Lytle, who at present represents that district, was the peculiar object of the Bank's malevolence, and no pains or expense was spared to defeat him. Exclusive of the city of Cincinnati, a large majority of the inhabitants of the county, between nine hundred and a thousand, voted for him; but the city, one of the sore places in the body politic, gave a majority of eleven hundred and upwards against him. In the thirteen counties the returns from which are above stated, our aggregate majority for Lucas in 1832 was 310; so that with the exception of the city of Cincinnati, the democratic cause shows an aggregate increase at the present time. Our vote in Congress from Ohio stood last winter 11 to 8. The delegation now chosen will probably be divided in the same way.—N. Y. Eve. Post.

We learn by a gentleman who left New York on Thursday, at 4 o'clock P. M., that the Rail Road Line from Philadelphia, which arrived after the publication of the evening papers, brought intelligence of the gain of another democratic member in Ohio.

We also learn that from the returns received by the same conveyance, there is every reason to believe that Mr Lucas will be elected by a majority not varying far from the majority in 1832.

The way they do it.—The Democrats of the Seventh Ward, New York, have erected a building expressly for their own use, which they call the "Democratic Head Quarters." The democrats in the Thirteenth Ward, having been circumvented by the use of Bank money, and shut out from their old place of meeting, set to work a few days ago, and between sunrise and sunset, erected from the foundation and wholly completed, a spacious building, fifty feet by twenty-five, in which they held a meeting the same evening.

The Albany Argus has been rapping Maj. Noah over his knuckles, rather severely, for a week or two past—the Major is very fretful and cross in consequence, and instead of defending himself with the keen Damascus blade which once flashed in his editorial contests, he now comes to the battle in boots as long, and sword as heavy and dull as Maj. Gaibraith's. Hard work, Major, but you have enlisted and received your advance, and must fight the money's worth.

Franklin Lectures.—Some alterations in the manner of conducting these lectures have been determined upon by the Executive Committee. The fourth course, consisting of sixteen lectures, will commence on the 3d November—the introductory Lecture by Professor Follen. No boys will be admitted, except in company with their parents or guardians.

The Mysterious Lady is doing all sorts of mysterious things at Concert Hall; she will tell you ever-so-much news for fifty cents; every thing that has or is to happen to you—what you say and what you think—what flesh or fish is most agreeable to your palate, &c. &c. Go and see her, Mr Public, and take your family.

We shall be obliged to ring our bell again, if a certain passenger, who is skulking about between decks, does not "step up to the Capin's office AND SETTLE" pretty soon.
